

the government's stimulus plan helps pay for your EHR — deferred billing helps you take advantage of their generosity

get 90 days to qualify for stimulus funds before you pay anything more than your monthly fee

Practices like yours are eager to adopt EHR, but struggle with the upfront costs associated with implementation and training. WebChart's deferred billing program eliminates upfront payments. You pay those costs after 90 days, when you're eligible to receive your government incentive.

here's how it works:

As a member of this program, you will have WebChart fully set up in your practice, including implementation and training. After 90 days of appropriate use, you may successfully attest to receive stimulus funds. Payment for implementation and training is due only after that 90 day use period.

Until then, you'll pay only your monthly fee.

The government recognizes the value of EHR to your practice and they've already established a program that allows you to pay for it. Now WebChart is removing the last obstacle by eliminating upfront implementation fees.

The use of WebChart in accordance with documentation and government standards to qualify for successful attestation is the responsibility of the clinician. Payment of upfront implementation and training fees is due 120 days after first use of the system. Certain hardware and other fees may be necessary based on client requirements.
